

After death, the soul takes shape in Deivalogam, and the soul attached with the boologam remains forever, is it so?

In Hindu spiritual philosophy, particularly in Tamil and Vedantic traditions, the ideas of Deivalogam (the divine or celestial realm) and Boologam (the earthly realm) symbolize two aspects of the soul's journey after death. The belief you mention—that after death, the soul takes shape in Deivalogam, while one part remains connected to the earthly Boologam—reflects a syncretic interpretation seen in some regional teachings, such as Siddha and Vethathiri philosophies.

Soul's Journey After Death

According to the Bhagavad Gita, the soul (Atman) is eternal, never created nor destroyed; only the physical body perishes. The Gita states that the soul simply transitions into another form, akin to changing garments. This process depends on the karmas (actions) and mental state of the individual at the time of death.^[1]

Deivalogam and Rebirth

In many Tamil and Hindu interpretations:

- Deivalogam represents the higher realms or divine planes (Deva-loka), where meritorious souls may temporarily reside after death due to good deeds and devotion.
- From there, the soul eventually returns to reincarnation on Earth (Boologam) when its accumulated good karma is exhausted. This cyclical journey between realms continues until the soul attains Moksha (liberation).^{[2] [3] [1]}

Soul Attachment to Boologam

The idea that a soul remains attached to Boologam (Earth) appears in folk and mystic traditions as "soul attachment." It is believed that souls with unresolved emotions, unfulfilled desires, or strong attachments may linger near their earthly surroundings or loved ones after death. This is sometimes interpreted as "earth-bound souls."^[4]

Spiritual Interpretation

The philosophical perspective, however, is that no part of the soul remains fixed in Boologam. The attachment exists only as impressions (vasanas) or psychic residues influencing the living or continuing into the next birth. In the highest understanding, the pure soul is unattached, and only its karmic energy determines the next destination—whether that be another birth, a divine realm, or liberation. ^[3] ^[5]

In summary:

After death, the soul does not split between Deivalogam and Boologam. It transitions according to karma—potentially to higher realms or immediate rebirth. The notion of the soul “remaining” attached to Earth symbolizes lingering emotional or karmic connections, not literal residence.

1. <https://www.radhakrishnatemple.net/blog/what-happens-after-death-bhagavad-gita/>
2. <https://www.dadabhagwan.org/path-to-happiness/spiritual-science/what-is-a-soul/where-does-the-soul-go-immediately-after-death/>
3. <https://www.dlshq.org/download/what-becomes-of-the-soul-after-death/>
4. <https://www.timesnownews.com/spiritual/signs-of-soul-attachment-article-110737417>
5. <https://hinduamerican.org/blog/5-things-to-know-about-hindus-and-death/>
6. <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Afterlife>
7. <https://www.facebook.com/vethathiriyoga/posts/after-death-no-rebirth-for-the-soul-soul-after-leaving-the-body-there-is-no-conglo/560633930633489/>
8. <https://www.ananda.org/blog/the-stunning-mystery-what-happens-after-death/>
9. <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=mKJxv9DQ4qs>